The selective laser induced oxidation method was applied to identify the IR absorptions of long carbon chain molecules isolated in oxygen containing cryogenic matrices. We have found a regular pattern in the absorptions of C_{2n+1} (n≥4) in which with increasing chain length the most intense IR absorption shifts to the red. In addition, our data allow conclusions regarding the spectra of unknown carbon chain oxides.